I have many memories of Mike, my father. (Genetic testing was performed.) Most of them aren't so good, and the rest are worse. How a man can carelessly create a child, even on the side, and just abandoned it, leave it to no one capable of raising it or caring for it, then feed countless lies to it over the years, and then break the only promise he ever made to it, are incomprehensible and reprehensible. I believed all of my life, from a tiny age and until now, that while he and I still breathed air that a chance remained that God or his conscience would speak to him and he would do right by me. But now, here he is, dead, without a single acknowledgement of my existence. Hope is what I'd always had for my father, but that hope died with him. Good riddance to them both.

Rachel, your comment makes me sad. I dated Mike when we were both in high school, probably shortly before you were conceived, since most men make that giant mistake while they're very young. I'd like to know your story, and I can tell you all the reasons I know why a very decent man can still do what he did. You can find me on FB and PM me.
